4. Rights and Privileges: Members shall be entitled but not limited to the following benefits:

   b) Institutional or Corporate Members shall have all the rights and privileges of individual members, with the exception of the right to vote and the right to hold office. Other rights shall be exercised through a maximum of three individuals designated by the organization holding the membership, and the Society must be informed of the names of the designated individuals at the time of the rights are exercised. This appointment does not confer membership on the designated individual.
   c) Members of the Society shall have the right to advertise in the publications of the Society at special membership rates.

5. Expulsion: Expulsion procedures shall be those determined by the Board of Directors. A member may be expelled from the Society for any of the following causes:

   b) conduct or public statements injurious to the Society or the profession, such as misrepresentation in advertising or public libel against a colleague in the profession;
   c) falsification or misrepresentation in the original application for membership in the Society; or
   d) violation of professional ethics.

Article IV. Officers

The officers of NOTIS shall be a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, and a Treasurer.

1. Duties. Their duties shall be those normally assumed for these offices, as defined in the Policy Documents.
2. Term of Office. The term of office shall be for two years, beginning on January 1 and ending on December 31. In order to assure continuity, the officers' terms shall overlap to the extent possible.

3. Appointment of Officers. The Board shall appoint the NOTIS Officers from among its members in December of each year. In case of a resignation or other unexpected vacancy, the Board shall appoint a Director to hold that office for the remainder of the term of that office.

Article V. The Board of Directors

1. Membership. The Board of Directors shall consist of a maximum of fourteen persons and shall include the Society's Officers, the Immediate Past President, and up to nine Directors.

2. Duties. The Board shall transact the business of NOTIS, defining policies and procedures in Policy Documents when necessary. By a simple majority vote, the Board may delegate decisions to a vote of all voting members of NOTIS.

3. Quorum. A quorum at meetings of the Board of Directors shall consist of a majority of Director positions filled.

4. Election to the Board of Directors. The membership shall elect Directors at the annual meeting held once each calendar year. Directors shall be elected for a two-year term, commencing on January 1. In case of a resignation or other unexpected vacancy, the Board shall appoint a person to hold that Director position for the remainder of the departing individual's term of office.

5. Nominating Committee for Board of Directors. The Board of Directors shall appoint a Nominating Committee in the spring of each year to propose candidates to the membership for the Director posts to be filled for the coming year. The committee shall include one Board member and two members at large, one of whom shall serve as chair. In selecting candidates, the committee shall endeavor to develop a Board with wide-ranging abilities and strengths to serve NOTIS and its members.

Article VI. Conduct of Elections

1. Supervisor of Elections. The Board of Directors shall appoint a Supervisor of Elections responsible for proper conduct of the annual election and any other elections or votes by the membership, such as amendments to the Bylaws.

2. Method of Voting. The Supervisor shall ensure that the necessary information for the election is provided to the membership at least ten business days in advance of the election. The membership shall have the opportunity to vote by mail, provided ballots are received by the Supervisor of Elections prior to the meeting at which the election is to be held, or in person at the meeting.

3. Quorum. A quorum for meetings of the membership shall consist of twenty-five members or ten percent of the total membership, whichever is fewer.

4. The Election. The Supervisor shall conduct the election, with the assistance of as many volunteers as deemed necessary. The affirmative votes of a majority of those voting in the election shall serve to elect a candidate as Director. Amendment to the bylaws shall require a two-thirds majority of those voting.

Article VII. Committees

Standing committees shall be: Computer, Directory, Editorial Review, Membership, and Program. It shall be the responsibility of the Board to establish other committees as needed and to appoint committee chairpersons.

Article VIII. Amendments to the Bylaws

Amendments to these bylaws may be proposed by the Board of Directors or by petition of no fewer than 10 voting members of the Society. Proposals originating by petition shall be submitted in writing to the Board of Directors on whose recommendation they shall be presented to the membership. Notification of proposed amendments must reach individual members no fewer than 15 business days prior to the date of the meeting at which the vote is to be taken. Adoption of an amendment requires a 2/3 majority vote as outlined in Article 6, Conduct of Elections.
Article IX. Parliamentary Authority

Unless otherwise covered by these Bylaws of NOTIS, Robert's Rules of Order, Revised, Modern Edition, shall apply at all meetings of the Society.

Article X. Dissolution

The Society may be dissolved only by a vote of 3/4 of the members present at a special meeting called for that purpose. On the dissolution of the Society, all the assets remaining after satisfaction of the Society's obligations shall be distributed, at the discretion of the Board of Directors, among foundations or learned societies that are organized and operated exclusively for charitable, scientific, literary or educational purposes, that allow no part of their net earnings to inure to the benefit of any private member or individual, and that do not carry on propaganda or participate or intervene in any political campaign.

MEMORANDUM

GENERAL CONSIDERATIONS FOR DETERMINING WHETHER TO INCORPORATE

This memorandum addresses the major legal considerations regarding whether a trade or professional group should be incorporated or remain as an unincorporated entity.

I. OVERVIEW OF INCORPORATION CONSIDERATIONS

Incorporation is the process of creating a legal entity under authority granted by a state or the District of Columbia. A corporation is a separate legal entity, with continuing existence independent of its officers, directors, stockholders, or members. An organization, whether incorporated or not, may be either a profit-making entity or a nonprofit organization. For-profit organizations typically are incorporated, issue stock to shareholders, and are taxable on net income. Nonprofit, or public interest, organizations have no specific "ownership" as such, but are generally controlled by members who do not receive stock. Only a nonprofit organization can be granted an exemption from Federal income tax by the Internal Revenue Service ("IRS"), but tax exempt status is not required for all nonprofit organizations. Organizations of industry firms or professionals typically would be granted tax exempt status under Section 510c(6) of the Internal Revenue Code as trade or professional associations. Decisions concerning incorporation, profit status, and tax exempt status are influenced by a number of considerations, as discussed below.

II. SPECIFIC CONSIDERATIONS FOR INCORPORATION

The following specific considerations are involved in determining whether or not to incorporate an organization:

A. State Laws.

A corporation is formed by the filing of Articles of Incorporation with a state government under the state’s corporation laws. These laws give guidance to corporations on organizational structure, voting, notice of meetings, termination of members, and other matters. As such, corporations are governed by a well-established body of statutory and case law, which allows a corporation to refer to applicable laws and other guidelines concerning its formation and administration. By comparison, unincorporated organizations are not subject to any reliable set of rules concerning formation, administration, or governance of the organization. Unincorporated organizations may have no more than vague reference or authority for procedures when questions or doubts arise.
B. Independence.
A corporation has an existence of its own, independent from its stockholders, members, directors, or officers. Although owned by stockholders, or controlled by members in the nonprofit context, a corporation is a separate legal entity, recognized as such by state and federal governments. A corporation theoretically is perpetual, although it can be dissolved or the period of its existence limited from the outset. An unincorporated organization has no separate legal existence, but is treated as separate by the Government in some situations, e.g., payment of taxes, but not in other cases, when its officers, directors, stockholders, or members must act on its behalf.

C. Liability.
One of the primary purposes of a corporation is to protect individual officers, directors, stockholders, or members from personal liability when such individuals are conducting activities on its behalf. These individuals generally will not be liable if acting reasonably and in good faith. The same protections do not apply to an unincorporated organization, whose individual officers, directors, shareholders, or members may be personally liable for acts of the organization. It should be pointed out, however, that certain laws will apply to participating individuals regardless of the legal status of the entity, including the antitrust laws, employment standards, salary withholding, discrimination laws, etc. Nonetheless, incorporation offers significant protections against personal liability for normal corporate activities.

D. Legal Actions.
A corporation can sue and be sued in its corporate name, while an unincorporated entity usually must appear in court in the name of participating individuals, such as officers or members. Using the names of individuals in judicial or administrative actions would likely be procedurally cumbersome, as well as raising public or member relations problems. Most important of all, perhaps, is that the participants in an unincorporated organization are usually and properly named individually as defendants when a complaint against the organization is filed.

E. Real Estate.
A corporation can own real estate in its corporate name in most states, while an unincorporated organization typically cannot. Instead, an unincorporated organization may have to hold property through a third party, such as the organization’s members or pursuant to a trust agreement.

F. Insurance.
Obtaining insurance, such as directors and officers liability insurance, is more difficult for an unincorporated organization, since in certain circumstances the insurance underwriter may not be able to determine the precise authority for the organization and its operation. An incorporated organization may not be more stable than an unincorporated one, but it provides the appearance of greater stability.

G. Technical Requirements.
A corporation must meet a number of technical requirements to obtain and maintain its corporate status. A corporation must observe various organizational and operational requirements under state laws. Articles of Incorporation must be filed with the state to establish a corporation. In addition, annual meetings must be held, minutes must be kept, and annual reports usually must be filed by corporations. Further, incorporation entails some legal costs, such as costs for drafting the Articles of Incorporation and bylaws, and making the required filings. Most of these technical requirements for corporations, however, are relatively straightforward and involve only modest expense. Unincorporated organizations do not have the same technical requirements.

H. Other Considerations.
The public is comfortable dealing with corporations. It may also be preferable from a psychologic perspective for an organization to become a corporation; there is certain stature and stability inherent in a

1 One issue that arises for trade and professional associations concerns the availability of “standing” for the organization to sue on behalf of its members. The issue of standing for a trade association to sue on behalf of its members is not clear cut, but courts have recently been receptive to permitting associations to bring such actions.
corporation. Other specific advantages may also apply, such as protecting and registering an organization's name.

These are some of the basic considerations involved in determining whether or not to incorporate. As a practical matter, the advantages of incorporation normally outweigh the disadvantages.

III. PROFIT AND TAX STATUS

A. Profit Status

An organization can be either a profit or nonprofit entity. A for-profit corporation is formed under the regular corporation law of a state and generally issues stock to stockholders, who own the corporation. A nonprofit corporation normally is formed under state nonprofit statutes and is controlled, but not owned, by its members, who are not issued stock. The purpose of such nonprofit corporations, also referred to as "nonstick" corporations, generally is to benefit the public; most churches, schools, scientific organizations, and trade associations are nonprofit.

In certain circumstances, the securities laws also have a significant impact on a decision as to profit status. The sale of shares of stock in a for-profit corporation is strictly regulated under federal and state securities laws. Even where a public offering of stock is not involved, complex laws and regulations govern whether a filing must be made to federal or state securities agencies. As a result, corporations formed by industry groups generally are nonprofit.

It should be pointed out that being a nonprofit corporation does not mean that it cannot make a "profit." State nonprofit laws generally allow the formation of corporations based on their public purpose, rather than actual year-to-year financial situation performance. A nonprofit entity may have dues revenues or receipts that exceed expenses. This is referred to as "surplus," rather than "profit," and could be retained as reserves for the organization.

Both profit and nonprofit organizations remain fully taxable in accordance with the Internal Revenue Code. If there is no income, of course, there would be no tax due; but any income would be taxable unless the organization is specifically determined by the IRS to be tax exempt.

B. Tax Exempt Status

As noted above, only nonprofit organizations are eligible to receive a determination of federal tax exemption, but tax exemption does not depend on whether an organization is incorporated. Both incorporated and unincorporated entities, if meeting statutory and IRS requirements, can receive tax exemption. Nonetheless, corporations have some advantages in the IRS approval process because corporate documents can be used to substantiate the existence, organization, and operation of the entity.

Tax exemption means that an organization does not generally have to pay federal income tax, but the organization remains liable for state taxes, such as income, sales, or use taxes (with certain exceptions for charitable organizations). Tax exempt organizations still may be liable for federal tax on income from certain activities under the "unrelated business income tax." This tax is due on income derived from substantial activities unrelated to an organization’s tax exempt public purpose. In most situations, the unrelated business tax is a relatively minor factor in determining whether tax exemption is appropriate.

An industry or professional group would be likely to receive tax exempt status under Section 501(c)(6) of the Internal Revenue code as a "trade association," "professional association," or "business league." A trade association is a nonprofit organization generally dedicated to promoting a certain industry or line of business, which is considered to be in the public interest. There are tens of thousands of trade associations, representing various aspects of almost all industries. Such associations are permitted to conduct any amount of lobbying activities in Congress and to represent their members before administrative agencies.

It is also important to understand that tax exempt status for trade or professional associations does not mean that charitable donations to the organization would be tax deductible for federal income tax purposes. Payments to trade or professional associations or similar organizations exempt under Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code, qualify for tax deductibility. Of course, members may deduct dues to trade associations and other related costs as ordinary and necessary business expenses.

There are significant advantages to tax exempt status, the most obvious being that the organization is not required to pay federal income tax. Also, because of the IRS determination of the organization’s public purpose, the general public and industry participants may view a tax exempt organization as more genuinely concerned with the public interest. Many tax exempt trade associations are considered leading forces in their industries, and can be positive forces in shaping the businesses of their members.

IV. PROCEDURAL ASPECTS

The procedural steps necessary for incorporation and obtaining tax exempt status are straightforward.

A. Incorporation

Incorporation is a relatively simple process. First, Articles of Incorporation must be prepared. This is a rather short document that is filed with the state in which the organization wishes to incorporate. Articles of Incorporation include the organization’s name, duration, purpose, classes of members, names of initial directors, etc. Generally, three persons must serve as “incorporators” and sign the Articles to be filed with the state, usually with a nominal fee. It is often possible to obtain a corporate charter in the District of Columbia, for example, in about one week.

Second, an individual (often the organization’s attorney) is appointed as the “Registered Agent” for the corporation in the state. The purpose of the Registered Agent is to receive service of legal process and other official notices.

Third, bylaws are prepared to govern the operations of the corporation. The bylaws provide the governing rules of the organization, including membership qualifications, elections, meetings, functions, and responsibilities of officers and directors, etc.

Fourth, the initial meeting is held, or a unanimous consent executed, to elect the Board of Directors and officers and to authorize certain corporate actions, such as adopting the bylaws and opening bank accounts, etc.

Fifth, a form is submitted to the IRS to obtain a Federal Employer ID Number.

There is no separate step required for becoming a nonprofit corporation; one simply files the Articles of Incorporation with reference to the state’s nonprofit statute. The District of Columbia, Maryland, and Virginia all have nonprofit corporation laws that would provide an acceptable legal environment in which to incorporate.

On an ongoing basis, the main obligations of a corporation are to keep minutes of meetings, meet certain other record keeping and administrative requirements, and submit annual reports with a nominal fee to the appropriate state. Annual report forms are relatively simple, and generally require only a listing of current officers and directors.

B. Tax Exemption

Obtaining tax exempt status involves only modest expense. An application first is made to the IRS on Form 1024, which requires a general description of the organization’s operations, submission of its governing documents (including Articles of Incorporation and bylaws), a list of officers and directors, and an estimated three-year budget. A filing fee is required for the Form 1024. It normally takes several months to receive a determination from the IRS of tax exempt status, but such status is retroactive if filed within 15 months of the date of formation or incorporation. Annual reports on Form 990 must also be filed to the IRS where a tax-exempt organization’s gross receipts exceed $25,000 per year.
V. CONCLUSION

There are a number of factors to be considered in determining whether to incorporate, including whether the organization intends to be a nonprofit entity and seek tax exempt status. All of these decisions basically depend on how the organization intends to operate over the long term.

Although the final decision, of course, will be made by the organization, several additional comments may be helpful. If the organization wants to formalize its activities, with the least liability and tax exposure, our experience indicates that it would be advisable to incorporate and operate as a nonprofit tax exempt corporation. There need be no material effect on the organization's administration, control, finances, etc., resulting from incorporation or tax exempt status. Procedurally, more formal record keeping and filing requirements would have to be met, but these are relatively simple details. Also, there should be no significant restrictions on lobbying, regulatory, or other activities important to the organization's members.

In sum, subject on the type of activities that the organization wishes to undertake in the long run, incorporation and obtaining tax exempt status generally would be most advantageous.
