American Translators Association Elects New Directors

ALEXANDRIA, VA — The American Translators Association, the nation's largest professional organization for translators and interpreters, announced the election of three directors at the Annual Meeting of Voting Members: Corinne McKay, Odile Legeay, and Faiza Sultan. Each has been elected to a three-year term. The newly elected directors join currently serving Board directors Lois Feuerle, Alan Melby, Virginia Perez-Santalla, David Rumsey, Ted Wozniak, Timothy Yuan—and President Dorothee Racette, President-elect Caitilin Walsh, Secretary Boris Silversteyn, and Treasurer Gabe Bokor.

Founded in 1959, the American Translators Association's primary goals include fostering and supporting the professional development of translators and interpreters and promoting the translation and interpreting professions. ATA, based in Alexandria, Virginia, currently has 11,000 members worldwide. For more information on ATA, please visit www.atanet.org.
